PRESIDENTS MESSAGE by Liz Daffner

Fall is here and the days are getting shorter. Nooooo! I welcome the cooler weather but I'm not ready to give up my sunset rides after a long day at work.

Our annual show is two weeks away and I hope you plan on bringing your horse or volunteering. Our online sign up sheet makes it super easy to pick a day and time. Help spread the word so we have a success show!

This year we've added a costume class on Western day and kept the Ranch Horse classes that have become so popular. We'll have a horse show wrap up meeting in November and our annual holiday party in December!

REMINDER:

MINUTES
LBHA General Meeting
September 19, 2018

Meeting began at 6:32 pm and was held in a new conference room at Loomis Basin Medical Center. LBHA and non members where present. The meeting was led by Dr. Langdon who shared what the clinic has learned from responding to major fires that have swept through our area in recent years.

Two main take aways where a list of materials that should be kept in a vet kit and the most common types of injuries seen at the evacuation centers. Surprisingly it was colic and lacerations due to stress and hauling. Make sure your horse can trailer before an evacuation. You have to decide on leaving early or leaving later when required. Usually law enforcement prevents you from going back in when you leave so multiple trips hauling back and forth are not feasible.

The community's response with volunteers is usually chaotic and inefficient. Some ranches will end up with a dozen trailers showing up to help while other ranches receives zero support.

If you have to leave horses it's better to leave them in open pastures and allow them to be in groups to comfort one another. Horses that are left in barns or small wooden paddocks suffer the most. If you turn them loose, close the barn so they do not run back and become trapped. Put water in the middle of pastures. Water troughs have melted completely to the ground and the risk of dehydration is more common than burns.

Owners who do not haul their horses often usually skip certain vaccinations. There was a flu outbreak in the midst of the evacuation center last year and it's another reason to keep horses up to date on shots.

Three ways to mark your horses if you have to leave them. Microchip, a grease pencil, and or a mane clip available online <https://www.sierraviewranchgeneralstore.com/manestay> and locally at Douglas Ranch Supply.

Horses do not appear to be as effected by smoke as people. If your horse is injured, stop any bleeding and keep the would clean until it can be seen by a vet.

There was a lot of good information given and we plan to do this again next. Make sure to check our event calendar throughout year and thank LBEMC for their continued support of our association.

Meeting adjourned at 8:01 pm

Make That First Impression Count: What Judges Are Looking For When It Comes To Grooming (Cynthia McFarland- Horse&Rider)

The moment you enter the show ring, your horse is on display. All your diligent grooming efforts are about to pay off.

Making a memorable first impression happens in seconds, but it takes much longer to achieve. It's the result of good horsemanship, proper nutrition and many hours of hard work. You can't just decide to start grooming the week before a show or event and expect to have good results.

"How a horse is turned out in grooming plays a huge role in overall eye appeal and first impressions. His appearance also automatically gives you an idea of that horse's overall health," notes Tina Anderson, who has been an American Quarter Horse Association (AQHA) judge for 15 years.

A lifelong horse owner, Anderson has her PhD in equine orthopedics; she's also worked in the field of equine nutrition, and is now Director of New Product Strategy and Development at Farnam Companies, Inc. Having shown for years, Anderson now finds herself a "horseshow mom" and regularly helps her teenage daughter, who competes at the national level.

"One thing a lot of exhibitors don't understand is that the judges get a very short window to evaluate your horse, whether in halter, western pleasure, hunter or even reining," says Anderson. "If you were to use a stopwatch, it would be a very short amount of time. Just as when you're meeting a person, you want to make a very good first impression. When I'm looking at any horse, that first impression is where I start, whether consciously or unconsciously."

A Little Extra

You'll want to enhance your horse's basic grooming routine with a bit of extra pizzazz when it comes to the show ring. But what are judges looking for? Beyond an incredibly clean, neatly groomed horse, judges want to see that you've paid attention to detail.

"A little face 'grease' will add a finishing touch to highlight and maintain shine around the eyes and muzzle," says Anderson.

In addition, "When a judge is close to the horse, especially in classes like halter and showmanship, they pay a lot of attention to hooves," she says. "To start with, you want a healthy hoof, and it goes without saying that the feet should be very clean inside and out. The horse should be up-to-date on trimming or shoeing so the feet aren't excessively long. In addition to clipping the legs and fetlocks, you should clip the hair around the coronet band so you have a finished look. With stock horse breeds, the majority of people still use hoof black on dark hooves. If the horse has a white leg, you can just use a clear hoof polish or a shine on that hoof."

When applying hoof polish, take your time and make sure to go all the way around the hoof to the bulb and down so the entire hoof surface is neatly covered. Be careful at the hairline that you don't get polish on the hair. Hoof polishing isn't as easy as you might think, so you may want to practice before show day.

Things to Avoid

If you're serious about showing, there are some things you can't put off. Ignore them and your horse won't catch the judge's eye ... or at least, not in a positive way.

A sun-faded hair coat is a big no-no. It doesn't happen overnight and it can't be remedied quickly. Ideally, your horse's coat is protected year round, but at the very least you'll want to start protecting his coat 90 days before you begin showing. A bare minimum would be 60 days.

Stable him during the peak sun hours, or if you want to turn him out, use a summer sheet or fly sheet. You may also want to use a coat conditioner that contains SPF for extra sun protection. There are supplements on the market designed to bring out coat color and shine, but they'll work best if you also protect your horse from too much sun exposure.

Another appearance no-no is a scruffy tail with broken-off hairs. Judges want to see a clean, free-flowing tail. It doesn't have to drag the ground (although some do!), but it needs to look healthy and luxurious.

In addition to providing optimal nutrition to encourage growth, you'll want to protect that tail hair when your horse is stabled or turned out. Braiding hair on hair can cause breakage, which is why experts recommend Lycra tail "tubes." Just divide the tail hair into three sections, insert each section into a tube and then braid the tubes together. The tail is protected from sun, mud, manure and breakage. Plus, it won't be a tangled mess when you undo it.

In the stock horse industry, big, thick tails are hot right now, and many exhibitors use tail extensions. Some riders like weighted tails, as this encourages the horse to carry the tail flat against the rump. Riders in English disciplines tend to use lighter weight extensions than those used by stock horse exhibitors.

A few caveats to remember when using a tail extension:

- Be sure the color completely matches your horse's natural tail color.
- Don't go too thick! If the extension is too thick, it will get caught between the horse's back legs and look obviously false.
- Don't leave an extension in overnight; it's meant for competition only.
- Whether you use tail extensions or your horse naturally has a long, thick tail, don't let static electricity spoil the look. Spray the inside of his hind legs with a silicone-base grooming product. You'll also want to make sure his chestnuts (those oval spots inside the legs near the hock and knee) are super smooth. Rough chestnuts can snag the tail and keep it from flowing freely as your horse moves.

Even if the show ring isn't your end goal, you still want your horse to look his best, so make grooming a regular routine. Beyond keeping your horse clean, it's an excellent way to get your hands on your horse from head to tail. This allows you to discover any potential health concerns (ticks, scratches, swelling, heat, abrasions, etc.) before they need support. Plus, grooming is just a great way to spend time with your horse while enjoying his company.
